

One on One Coaching for CXOs

What approach do you take to develop and support your senior leaders?

When it comes to the senior leadership team and their development, you know that you cannot take a chance. You would like to make the developmental journey contemporary, relevant, linked to the business goals and above all personalized.

You could send them to the best management institutes to do a short-term leadership workshop. But then it's an individual journey not a collective journey of the leadership team. Also, it's not personalized.

You could hire a coach for your senior leaders. This does help with personal transformation but is still not a collective process. This could create leaders but does not create collective leadership.

You could design an offsite/retreat. Then you have deep insights but, in all likelihood, merely surfacing insights does not actually lead to any meaningful change or development.

As a Learning and Development leader, you are interested in long term perspectives, will like to explore what would be really meaningful and wants the best possible solution that your leaders would find impactful.

What we found useful

From our past experience, we found that 3 things are important when you plan a leadership development for leaders.

1. Making it contextual

How could you bring your business context into the program? This way the learning journey would get linked to the business context and future business aspirations of the organization. We have a methodology to inculcate this into the learning journey.

2. Focusing on Three Different aspects

We need to focus on developing Human Capital, Cultural Capital and Social capital and make it personalized. Human capital is the competencies that someone wants to develop to increase his or her abilities, cultural capital is imbibing, and demonstration of Organisation Values and Social Capital is the networks and support systems one builds. We have a broad leadership model that allows the business context and these competencies to get integrated so that your leadership development design is linked to individual and the organizational context.

3. A blended approach

Here we found that a 3-step approach can be quite effective - An initial workshop at the beginning and one at the end, with in between one on one coaching and driving action learning projects create the best results. Thus, encouraging learning by doing, learning from experience in the workshop and personalized developmental action through coaching. We have used this methodology with Mercedes, Fractal Analytics, Jindal, Aircel, MSD, Novartis, RBS, Sterlite Power and now starting with Sterlite technologies.

The ODA Way

- We work with stakeholders in the organisation to create content, measurement mechanisms, branding the program, deciding the senior leaders in the organisation who will facilitate fire side chats and finalise the details of the design.
 - The workshops, at the beginning and end are one to two days in duration.
 - Coaches at the end also provide an individual report of each coachee.
- There is a pre coaching conversation before the workshop and then two coaching conversations in a month for six months usually. The coaches are trained and with experience in senior leadership roles.
 - There is also one three-way conversation where the coach, coachee and his or her manager come together.
 - The entire project management is managed by ODA.

Our Expertise

- We have worked with large number clients in the area of leadership development and have expertise in assessment, designing developmental journeys and facilitating those journeys. Pepsico, Novartis,
 - Schneider Electricals, Fractal Analysis, GSK, Mercedes, RBS, Vodafone, Metlife, WNS, IDFC Bank, ASK wealth management, etc
 - We have a pool of coaches with industry background and experience. Because these coaches are participated in several leadership development interventions of ODA, they know how to support a leadership development journey rather than just providing coaching support.
- We use a phenomenological model that focuses on individual uniqueness and believe that everyone could lead based on whom they are. This makes the developmental journey personalized.
 - 21 Years of experience and constant positive feedback from clients
 - Ability to create measurement mechanisms and effectively project manage the entire intervention.